[From the Scientific American.] The Utilization of Waste Matters.

never allows a particle of matter to be either wasted or lost, is so manifest that it could scarcely have escaped the attention of man; and so, when circumstances compel him, it is not surprising to see him putting in practice the lesson she has taught him. and striving to put every scrap to the best account. In China, owing to the crowded state of the population, this economical husbanding of material has, of necessity, long been in vogue; and to such an extent is it carried that what would be considered strict economy in Europe or America would there be regarded as absolute waste. The same causes have been slowly operating to bring about a similar state of things in Europe. Thousands of materials that were but a few years ago thrown away as utterly useless are now carefully saved and turned to some account either for purposes of luxury or necessity. Hosts of costly products of distant climes can now be procured at home, at an insignificant expense, from the most unpromising sources. For instance, science has evoked the most delightful perfumes from the most offensive refuse, and extracted dyes of the most gorgeous hues from a most unlikelylooking material-pitchy-black tar. Accidental discoveries, no less than active researches, are continually transforming something comparatively worthless into some article else that stands high in commercial estimation, and supplementary factories are gradually springing up to utilize the by-products of others. So numerous are the discoveries that something useless may be converted into something useful, and so rapidly does one follow in the wake of another that it is difficult to keep pace with them. Scarcely a scientific exchange reaches us that does not contain the announcement of some such fact, and the details of the process by which the result may be reached. Here, for example, before us, in the current No. of the Echo Industriel, we have a description of the method by which the straw is extracted rom manure heaps, to be subsequently utilized (after cleaning and drying) as a cheap bedding for horses and cattle, packcially for making paper pulp, to which it is said to be peculiarly adapted; since, safurated with prince and allowed; since, ing for glass, crockery, etc., but more espesaturated with urine and allowed to ferment, ammonia is evolved, which aids in separating the fibres, and reduces the need of using stronger and costlier alkalies to a minimum. After extracting the straw the remaining manure is sold for the usual puroses. The simple machinery for doing all this is the invention of an American resident of Paris. Much of the false hair worn by the fair sex of Europe and America is derived from sources that would make the wearers stand aghast were they to learn the facts. From a late report on the commerce of Swatow (China) we learn that a large export trade in hair, gathered in the which year 141 piculs (18,800 pounds), ministers to the luxury of life. It is commonly supposed that all floral essences are the product of distination; nothing could be a greater mistake; nearly every perthe product of distillation; nothing could fume of the toilet bottle or sachet of the at that peculiar period it would have brought mouchoir case is the product of waste matters-some of them odorless, others most intensely nauseous and disgusting. The fact, well known to the school-boy, that by the action of sulphuric acid on starch, sawdust, woody fibre, &c., a saccharine substance called glucose," or grape-sugar, is produced, has not by any means been lost sight of in this country, notwithstanding the low price of cane sugar. Extensive works for the manufacture of this article are located in one of the largest cities of the western part of the State, and almost every day one or two caronds arrive-occasionally consigned to Europe, but oftener to the various brewers of the city and vicinity, and to extensive dealers in molasses. All these matters show a direct application of science to an industrial purpose, and imply a knowledge of the deepest investigation into organic chemis-

One of the most singular discoveries in the history of agricultural chemistry is due ment. The development of this new industry is principally due to MM. HOW PRIVATE HINES'S TROUSERS COST THE Anson G. McCook, of New York, for the relief of Private William Hines, of Com-October, 1876, the trousers and blanket belonging to Private Hines were destroyed by fire, which broke out in his tent at Aiken, S. C. The amount of his loss in money was $8.65. He claimed that the fire was purely accidental, and that he was entitled to have his blanket and trousers gratuitously duplicated. The commandant of the regiment, not wishing to limbs exposed, issued him a pair of regulation blues and a blanket of the approved shoddy pattern. Here the trouble commenced, for a question was at once raised as to the authority of the Government to make Hines a present of these articles. The officers who had issued them to him were responsible, and they stood charged on the rolls. Hines, of course, received his divers parts of his body, and one of his breeches and blankets and went off about his business. A board of survey, composed | crushed in two, being held together merely of military officers, was convened to determine whether the fire which destroyed the providential, and nearly all the officers in rator, and was the owner and proprietor of the regular army were brought into the controversy one way and another. The matter finally took the shape of a bill, which was introduced in the House by Mr. Mc-Cook. This bill simply justifies the officer who issued Hines bis trobsers and blanket gratuitously, and does not, as is generally supposed, reimburse Hines directly for his loss. The House Military Committee, which has been giving the bill a careful consideratible was, or early tion, has finally made up a lengthy report, accompanied by all the army orders and endorsements of the claim, and a printed vate in the army, had a right to be at Aiken, S. C., on the 11th of October, 1876. The army at that time was being used to control the elections in the southern States, and there was a grave constitutional question as to its right to be there. The committee decided that Hines was on duty at Aiken by order of his superiors, and that so far as he and his trousers were concerned the constitutionality of the question could not enter. The committee next satisfied itself, from an examination of the testimony of the Army Board of Survey, that the fire which destroyed Hines's tent originated in the top, and that nobody was to blame. It stalls of barbers, sprang up in 1873, during was first thought that Hines's carcless handling of a pipe brought on the catastroworth 2,904 taels ($4,300), were shipped to phe, but this was set aside by the proof that Europe. All the evidence arose to 1,000 piculs, with a value of over went to show that Hines was sleeping $25,000—certainly a remarkable industry to quietly in his tent, in a disrobed state, as a gentleman should, when the fire broke out, and that when aroused he haps more indebted than any art that parts to the land that have his property. The House Military Committee very sensibly concluded that the officers who furnished Hines with a pair of trousers disrepute upon the country to have had even so humble a person as an army private

The thoughtless may call it "red tape" or circumlocution, but without it Hines to-day of trousers and a blanket to which he would run on the Bank of Commerce, but this have no legal title. As it is, the system has been vindicated, the right of the United and his personal and pecuniary responsibility determined. Under all the circumstances, your committee recommend the passage of the bill. It is to this splendid vindication of socalled "red-tapeism" that we wish to call particular attention. The time taken up in cost the departments and the country generally about $3,000. In view of the perfect system of guards and checks which surround the handling of Government property, this is quite reasonable. GET THE GENUINE ARTICLE .- The great popularity of "WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF COD-LIVER OIL AND LIME" has induced some unprincipled persons to attempt to palm off a simple article of fering from coughs, colds, or consumption, should be careful where they purchase this article. It remires no nuffing. The results are its best recommendations, and the proprietor has ample evidence on file of its extraordinary success in pulmonary complaints. The phosphate of lime possesses a most marvellous healing-power, as combined with the oure Cod-Liver Oil by Dr. WILEOR. It is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. For sale by A. B.
